Species Daylilies
The Hemerocallis species are often overlooked. Each exhibits wonderful garden characteristics, particularly suited for cottage gardens, wild plantings, collections, and other less formal gardens. As with all daylilies, they provide a hardy long-lived backbone to any garden, yet are understated and so meld well with other plants.

Early Blooming Species
These wild species are widely adaptable long lived and blend into almost any planting!

The Season of Blooms Collection
Designed to provide four months of consistent bloom, daylilies succeed each other starting from the extra early season through late season. We will select a variety of colors from among our best performers of average heights of two to three feet tall. The more plants in your collection, the more blooms you have at any one time. The plants are not individually labelled. Bloomtimes may vary, depending on your climate.
$95 for 10 plants $125 for 15 plants
Siberian Iris

Our main reason for growing Siberian Iris, beside the beautiful colors, is their hardiness and longevity which make them perfect complements to Daylilies. Iris siberica grows in most garden soil types with at least a half a day of sun. We have found the Siberians to be tolerant of both extremely wet soils and droughty soils. Performance and increase are best in soils on the wet side. Siberian Iris are resentful of transplanting and as such generally take a whole season of growth before blooming.

Name A Daylily:
Chris has developed a large selection of hybrid cultivars. Because of this we are always looking for new names for our daylilies and so are offering customers the opportunity to name a daylily. The process is simple, just contact us about it or check online. The cost is $125.00 for naming and typically $35 for a blooming size plant ("A" size). You will get a certificate and the plant will be officially registered with your name choice. Contact us for more information.
